A Longstanding Health Service goal has been for patients to be seen quickly by the right person, for the right appointment, with the right intervention at the right time.

It is time to start thinking about how we might achieve this in audiology.

The British Academy of Audiology and sector colleagues invite you to a day where we explore pathways that work across the life course presenting all options for the patient and which all audiologists can agree upon. Lessons from this event will then be shared and built upon over time, including helping to develop more sustainable services and workforce across the U.K.

Professional Bodies in Australia have already joined together to produce an inclusive scope of practice document covering all professionals in the sector which covers tasks that are appropriate for the profession. This might provide helpful context prior to the meeting and you can access the document by following this link:
